From the Author

I'm very excited to release A Time to Live as an ebook. The contemporary suspense romance has a fantastic cover created by the very talented Erin Dameron Hill. Although only recently released, this book is not one of my most recent writings. I'm still working on getting my back catalog on Amazon and that takes time, especially since I'm also writing new work. A Time to Live is actually the second novel I ever wrote with the intent of publishing and the first in the contemporary romance genre (the very first novel I wrote with the goal of publishing was the historical romance By Any Other Name). So readers of his novel are going to see differences in writing style and story structure. In each of my books, I am now putting a list of the novels I have written. They are in order of writing, not release dates. If you're curious about which came first, the chicken or the egg, check that list.

That being said, I still like this story and enjoy the characters. Michael especially has a very special place in my heart because his skills and talents are unlike any other hero I've ever written. I hope you enjoy reading A Time to Live and I want to thank all of my readers for making my venture into ebooks and Amazon a successful one.

Happy reading!

From the Back Cover

Nikki frowned in confusion, but allowed him to put the jacket on her. She looked up at the wall of the ravine then abruptly slumped against him, her hand clutching his shirt. "Michael," she whispered in a tiny voice. "I was so worried. I thought they were shooting at you." Her entire body began to quiver.

He held her as tightly as he dared, his heart warming with a sensation he did not care to examine too closely. "It's all right, sweetheart. I'm here and I'm going to take you home."

She nodded. Carefully, he lifted her into his arms.

Nikki bit back a soft cry of pain, then abruptly sagged, unconscious.

Michael's heart lurched. "Nikki," he called, his voice strained. "Wake up! You've got to stay awake."

She didn't move.

"No, Nikki, don't do this to me." His arms tightened around her.

Michael heard the sound of another four wheel drive churning along the edge of the ravine. His stomach coiled. Were Taylor and his goons returning to finish what they started? Two sets of headlights approached and Michael scowled. Usually they all piled into Taylor's Jeep.

The vehicles stopped at the edge of the ravine. People carrying flashlights emerged. "Miss Matthews?" A voice boomed.

Michael's scowl deepened, that didn't sound like Taylor.

"Sheriff," another voice said. "Over here, I found shell casings."

Fear blazed a mindless path through Michael's body and his heart slammed against his ribs. How did the sheriff know to look for Nikki? Michael dismissed the thought as he stared down at the unconscious, injured woman in his arms. If they found him like this it would start all over again. He would be blamed for something he had not done.

Michael searched the dark forest around him. He could leave Nikki here and fade into the woods. As long as they didn't see him, they couldn't blame him for this. But how could he return her to the freezing snow? It was dark and the storm grew worse. What if the sheriff didn't find Nikki in time and she died? Michael would never be able to live with himself.

His jaw was so tight it ached, but Michael took a deep breath. "Down here, sheriff!"

Flashlights spun toward him, shining in his face, blinding him.

"Freeze, Roumare! Put Miss Matthews down."

Michael winced as the sheriff and his deputies leveled their guns at him. "I can't, sheriff, she's too cold. If I put her back in the snow the hypothermia will kill her."

"I said put her down!"

"John," Doc Blackthorn's voice rang out. "Michael is right."

Michael breathed a sigh of relief, he hadn't realized Doc was there. The man was one of his few friends on Shadow Mountain.

"Doc," the sheriff snapped. "I've got to follow procedure here."

"Listen," Michael barked. "Nikki is injured and far too cold. The longer we stand here the worse it will get. About one hundred feet to your left the ravine levels out."

The sheriff snapped a curse. "Start walking, Roumare, but do anything stupid and you're a dead man."

Michael gritted his teeth, but moved toward the opening of the ravine. Two deputies shadowed him along the edge, while the sheriff, Doc, and the others climbed into their vehicles and drove to the end. Moments later, Doc threw open the back of his customized Suburban and pulled out a stretcher. He rushed to Michael. "Is anything broken?"

"Not that I could find," Michael said and quickly related Nikki's injuries. He eased her onto the stretcher. The sheriff and one of his deputies grabbed Michael's arms and twisted them behind his back. Cold, hard handcuffs clamped around his wrists.

"You are under arrest for the attempted murder of Nicole Matthews. You have the right to remain silent...."

Michael squeezed his eyes shut as the sheriff's voice droned in his ears. Not again, his thoughts screamed. I didn't do anything. He had counted on a woman telling the truth once before and had known only betrayal. The sheriff and the legal system would push Nikki to the breaking point and she would believe the lies. The horror would happen all over again.

Slowly, Michael lifted his head and stared at Nikki's blood spattered face. Only one thing truly mattered. "Please let her be all right," he whispered.

The chemo didn't work, neither did the experimental therapy. When Nikki Matthews learns she is dying of lung cancer and has only six months to live, she abandons Los Angeles and flees to Shadow Mountain, Colorado...a place where she always wanted to live...a place where she can die in peace. Despite her intentions of no friends and no attachments, she meets Michael de Roumare. Half French and half Arapaho, the residents of Shadow Mountain treat Michael with hatred and contempt. Nikki is not sure why and try as she might, she cannot deny her growing attraction to the handsome young man.

Michael has known only hell the past year, falsely accused of rape and disfiguring a young woman, the jury found him not guilty but he was tried and convicted in the press – a vicious, backwater half-breed. Then, to his horror, someone starts killing the women in Michael's life and framing him for their murders. The residents of Shadow Mountain now fear a serial killer walks among them and they are certain the vicious murderer is Michael.

Nikki came here to die. She never planned on finding a righteous goal, she never planned on fighting for the truth, but she has found that with Michael and perhaps...just perhaps...she might find something more in the short time she has...as long as the killer doesn't reach her first.

Brilliant engaging story

By Gii

This was a wonderful story. The cast of characters diverse and interesting. I loved that Nikki was selling up and moving to the mountains to 'die'. Along the way she meets her neighbour Michael. She tries to maintain a distance because she doesn't want to cause any pain for people when she is 'gone'.

She unknowingly stumbles into a town fraught with racism and a serial killer. Is the serial killer her neighbour? Or is it some other yahoos that made a negative impression?

Michael is a half breed Arapaho Indian and French. He is tied to the land and is in tune with nature. He was a gem of a character. This story was believable and had all the elements to make it a great read; romance, suspense, serial killer, stupid ass men that should get the 'Darwin Award' and an extremely biased Sheriff!

I had to finish this till the end it was that engaging. I do have to admit that the killer is not too difficult to figure out. The 'whys' were really interesting to read. Nikki doesn't take any crap and can hold her own! Real kick ass girl!

Do yourself a favour and download this immediately, you won't be disappointed!

Brilliant!! Awesome Read!!

By Brenda Romine

I want to give this more than five stars! It was that good!! Totally loved the story line and how well the story flowed. The characters are so lovable and down to earth. You just can't put this down until you are finished.

Nikki takes off to Colorado to die alone. She was given only three to four months left to live. The chemo treatments and all the tests were just too much for her to handle anymore. Not to mention the doctor who was treating her was her lover. Nikki found out he was sleeping with another woman and she just wanted to get away and die in peace. She figured it was better this way. No one to leave behind grieving for her. No more tests, no more problems. What she didn't expect, was to meet up with a ruggedly handsome man who could make her weak in the knees and infuriate her at the same time.

Michael, he has fallen for the new girl in town but it seems trouble follows him wherever he goes. The town's people don't like him and try to drive him out of town every time he sets foot in its limits. Michael can't help but try to make friends with Nikki. After all she is his new neighbor now.

There is just something about her he can't put his finger on. It's like she's hiding something and holding back at the same time. But once they both start to fall in love things really start to get crazy. Michael gets charged with another murder that happens in town. It seems like he keeps getting framed for these murders but the charges don't stick. Something strange is going on and it's going to take over his life. Worse of all now Nikki is at risk as the next target.

Like I said, this is an amazing story and you want to put it down!

Serial killer thriller with touching romance

By Lisa S. / Royal Lioness Lisa blog

A story of prejudice, illness, serial killings, trust and falling in love when the odds are against it. Nikki wants to die alone (lung cancer) on her own terms & moves to Shadow Mountain where she meets Michael, who is half Native American. He is the victim of prejudice & accused of being the serial killer. They fall in love and have to get past their own past and trust issues, while figuring out who is the real killer with a surprise twist. Touching, one small sex scene, good suspense, worth reading.
